

Celtic Underground Podcast 75

Contributed by Eddie Pearson
Wednesday, 27 January 2010

You know how it is - you wait ages for a podcast and then two come along at once. Hot on the heels of podcast 74 comes erm podcast 75. This week Eddie is joined by Douglas Beattie, author of "Happy Birthday Dear Celtic ." Douglas gives his thoughts on the recent game of two halves against St Johnstone and responds to one of our callers. Next we discuss his new book and St Anthony drops by to offer his opinions on this story of the centenary double winning season. Douglas talks of his experiences researching the book and meeting some of the stars from that era. We discuss the process behind getting a book published and reminisce about the good old days of Tommy Burns, Chris Morris and the rest. Finally they look ahead with some relish to the match against Hibernian and Eddie starts to panic about getting the podcast out before the preview becomes completely redundant. We also make mention of a charity raffle which you'll find at <http://www.kerrydalestreet.org.uk/tommytribute.html>

You can listen to and download the latest podcast here

{mp3remote}<http://media.libsyn.com/media/celticunderground/cu75.mp3>{/mp3remote}

The feed for the podcast can be found here . "Where's podcast 74?" we hear you cry. Well you should have subscribed like we told you to shouldn't you? Eh? You wouldn't have missed it if you had a nice wee subscription. And just to be clear for the benefit of the hard of thinking - subscription doesn't cost you any money. More's the pity. We'll never make our 8th million pounds at this rate.

To get in touch with us regarding any comments, suggestions, criticisms or wildly inaccurate rumours you'd like to see addressed on the next podcast, or if you'd like to contribute with an mp3 you can email, or leave your comments below.